Dealing with Doubt

Leah expressed her uneasiness about believing in God. “I have too many doubts,” she concluded.

“What do you believe in?” she was asked.

“I want to believe in God,” she responded, “but I belong to the scientific community and we need proof.”

“Are you looking for absolute proof?”

“That would be nice,” Leah grinned.

“Science tells us that water is made of H₂O, but every drop of water on earth has not been tested. That would be absolute truth. But sufficient testing has been done to conclude water consists of hydrogen and oxygen.”

“So what evidence would be adequate for believing in God? What would spark your faith in Him?”
