

ENGAGING SPIRITUAL CONVERSATIONS

Searching for Connection

After two years of knowing me, a lady asked me, “What’s your church like? We are not satisfied at the church we’re attending and we’re looking.” She was part of a mainline church that was wandering at a time of pastoral transition.

She continued— “Do you serve communion? Will my husband who has a handicap be able to make it okay? Will we be accepted?”

Part of the beauty of the church is the way in which people with diverse backgrounds and challenges come together under the Lordship of Jesus.

This woman’s questions are reflective of others who are interested in finding a new connection for spiritual growth:

Do you believe what is essential in my beliefs?

Will you be able to help us with the particular challenges we face?

Will we be able to find fellowship and a place of service with this congregation?
